

OLD PUEBLO COMMUNITY SERVICES

Continuum of Solutions to Homelessness

The road can be foreboding for people struggling to reenter mainstream society after years of displacement due to military service, incarceration, substance dependency and/or homelessness. Questions arise –Where do I go next? How do I get started? Where can I find guidance and support? Where can I find others that I can relate to?

Mission: When people face homelessness, Old Pueblo Community Services offers housing, counseling and support services to help them transform their lives. Programs and services are delivered as described below.

Outreach: The Outreach team works in the Tucson community to identify persons in need of housing and linking them to housing in or outside of the OPCS system. Additionally, an outreach team enters the Arizona Department of Corrections to identify high needs individuals who will be released homeless from incarceration. And finally an OPCS Therapist conducts outreach in the Pima County jail to identify similar clients pending release from the jail homeless.

The Homeless Prevention team provides supportive services to persons who are released from crisis facilities, so that they may stay in their home.

Bridge Housing is a low-barrier apartment community that serves persons with high needs and high barriers to traditional shelters. This may include continuing to use alcohol/drugs, those with pets, or couples who do not wish to separate in shelter care.

Veteran Recovery Communities provide housing and treatment services provided by both OPCS and the Southern Arizona Veterans Administration Health Care System.

Reentry Recovery Communities provide a structured housing and treatment option for persons in need of moderate to intensive support services. Reentry residents participate in Intensive Outpatient Treatment services and receive case management and employment support.

Supportive Housing includes site based options such as the Tucson House, as well as scattered site housing. This housing is for persons who have experienced chronic homelessness and are in need of long term support to maintain their housing and wellness.

The Outpatient program is a licensed behavioral health program that supports the mental health and recovery of clients within our recovery communities. Additionally, this program provides DUI services to members of the Tohono O’odham Tribe.
